But editing these clips into something convincing enough to share with the world can be a daunting task, especially for those of us who aren't iMovie or Final Cut Pro professionals. Global Delight's Game Your Video game wants to make the video editing process as simple as possible, and it does an excellent job of it. The Video game is an iPhone app designed to edit the videos you shoot on your iPhone. The company says it wants to play the video editing process, and does so by offering video games as controls. While I don't sell myself entirely across game terminology, I was definitely impressed with all the app editing features. It's incredibly easy to add special effects, filters, music and more to your videos, plus it's fun. After you launch the app, you'll be taken to the Home screen, where you can select Game Your Video— crop or join videos, flip a video, or enter Do So, the app's video-sharing network. You do most of the editing in game mode on your video; You can choose to edit clips from the album for the camera or from the app library that stores all saved videos that you edited with the app. Make it special: You can add a lot of special effects to your video by tapping an edit feature when you want to apply it. When you edit, the video takes up most of the screen. Below it, you'll see a timeline and a scroll menu for the editing tools. You can add more than a dozen special effects like Slow, fast, echo, zoom and pixels, among others. Just tap to play your video, then tap the special effect you want to apply at certain points in your video. You can also add voice and audio effects – laugh, applause, Boo and Twitter are just some suggestions and graphic elements like cartoon smiley faces or heart. Game Your video is definitely not short of editing options. Perhaps the easiest way to give your video some extra flair is by applying one of the app's many flavors that automatically give your video certain features. You can access the Tastes menu on the scroll editing toolbar; from there, you can choose between options like Chaplin, which will add a B&W filter, increase speed, and add as an audio melody similar to Charlie Chaplin. Some other flavors include Psychedelic, Action, and Old Look. You can customize your video more according to you by selecting a filter and then music library on the iPhone or from the app's eight music songs. When you choose to add a song to your video, it will replace the original audio track. There's no way to add music as a background element right now, and you can still hear the audio of the original video, such as people having a conversation. According to Global Delight, this feature is in the works for future updates. The app lets you make basic settings of your video, including And all the editing features mentioned above can be accessed while shooting with the built-in live mode. You can capture a video and see any selected effect that happens in real time. While this will make subsequent editing more difficult, as you won't have an original clip to work with, it's a pure feature for shooting fast and fun videos. They did this: See another video game your videos on the app's video sharing network. Once you're done editing or capturing your video with the app, the finished product will be saved to your video game library. (If you shot the video with the Camera app or other third-party app, the original remains unchanged in the camera.) You can save the edited video to the album with the camera or share it on YouTube, Facebook or on the social network of your video, I did. It was one of my favorite features, mainly because I could see videos created by other Users of Game Your Video. You can search for videos by date of upload, most viewed, or by flavor. However, the video needs to be uploaded to YouTube to appear in the I Did It library. The app gives users an extensive creative license without bogging them down on technical issues; there is very little learning curve. It's certainly not an advanced video editing app like iMovie, but Game Your Video is aimed at a completely different audience. If you want to create fun videos in the case of minutes, Game Your Video is definitely a worthy option. For examples of videos edited with the app, check out the YouTube channel for your video.
